The user is entitled in particular to access their data, to have it rectified or erased, to have its processing restricted, to data portability and, in the cases specified by law, to object to the data processing or to withdraw consent previously given.

Requests to exercise rights can be submitted in writing. The data controller examines each request and, if it is unable to comply with it for legal reasons, informs the applicant of this, giving reasons.

The detailed rules on user rights are contained in Articles 12–22 of the GDPR; for further information, the user can contact the data controller.
